plained. Later in the game the Babe tried to apologize to Heinie. Heinie refused to accept the said apology. He still believes that Mr. George Herman Ruth is a rude baseball player.

Charm of the Iron Hat Falls.

For the first time during the current series Col. Tillinghast L'Hommiey Hutton donned the iron hat. The charm of that celebrated chap seems to have been dissipated. Though this great warrior was wearing the very headpiece that carried the Yankees through their season, the New York Americans lost the third game. They lost it very thoroughly, too. The artillery, in other words the batters, on whom the owners of the Yankees are depending did not hit. John William Scott, once a problem but now a hero, must have had something to do with this. At any rate the Yankees did not hit. When a team fails to hit they get no runs and when they do not get runs they do not win any baseball games.

The very expensive Mr. Ruth could not even reach third. Economically John J. McGraw seemed to have considered an advantage. It seems that when Scott was discarded by Herr August Herrman he was getting as much as $2,000 per season. In Boston, where John William used to be paid off, this was considered quite a sum. In Ridgeway, N. C., John William was regarded as quite a wealthy person. Consider it in this light; here is a $2,000 pitcher beating something like a million dollar baseball. These things happen only in our national pastime.

Baseball history in the Scott case will credit McGraw with great luck or great misfortune. The correspondent would like to look back on it as an evidence of McGraw's good natured faith in human beings. It was something more than luck, your correspondent thinks.

Along came the lumbering Tarheel who had been turned loose by August Herrman.

Mr. McGraw, he said, "I can pitch. The scouter coming back. I know it is coming back."

Scott Replaces Phil Douglas.

"If you think so, stick around," said McGraw. So Jack Scott, or John William Scott, or John William Scott, started to pitch to his way back. By the time the Giants started on their road trip John William was signed as a regular pitcher. He replaced Shufflin' Phil Douglas who was shuffled out of baseball at the time. Shufflin' Phil, it will be recalled, was one of the heroes of last year's series. Now John William Scott of Ridgeway, N. C., is the leading candidate for the heroism of the current series.

The Giants got their first two runs in the first inning. The score at the time pitcher started the scoring with a single to left. Bancroft shot a hard one at Ward who juggled the ball. Scott reaching third. Heinie der Groh dribbled one down to Hoyt and Scott was caught between third and the home plate. While Dugan was playing a game of tag with Scott Bancroft raced to third and Heinie der Groh scored. This brought up Frank Frisch. Frisch lifted a sacrifice fly to center and Bancroft scored. Then came Irish Meusel, who hits when he means something. He hit to right and Groh scored the second run.

This gave John William plenty of confidence. He had no more to lose. He did not. John William had perfect confidence in himself as he started the game. It was not a boastful self-confidence either. John William did not feel the least bit like a hero last night. He take the Captain's place, while Beckett will run the team at quarterback. The loss of these two men from the line-up probably will be felt, as the Tarheels are here with a strong team.

The team arrived this afternoon and will have a workout in the Bowl in the morning. It is reported that the North Carolina eleven is a much stronger one than that which faced Yale last year.

Without O'Hearn and Jordan Yale may be expected to win.

Tad Jones announced to-night that several substitutes will be sent in during the game. Yale expects one of the largest minor game attendances in football history here. Twelve hundred Kentonians will help swell the number.

Prevent Two More Defeats.

By SAMUEL J. BROOKMAN.

The Yankees' cause is not hopeless by any means. They have but to win four of the next five.

Great Scott, but Scott was great! Think of a pitcher whose arm was pronounced absolutely "gone" a brief few months ago twirling a four hit shutout in a world series!

Half a dozen Fordham Hospital surgeons sat in natty white uniform in the press section during the game. Queried as to "What are they doing here?" "Oh, he answered, "they're just prepared to pick up the umpires' remains if another world series game is called on account of darkness before 4:40 P. M."

Just to show how sore they were at the way they had been deprived of an extra inning or two the day before the fans filled the stands again to suffocation.

The only bored individual within the grounds was the monkey that Altrock and Schacht trotted out to assist them in their pantomime program just before game time.

The series is only two games old, but it has already put expert prediction to shame.

Cheer or boo? Half the fans do not know which to do. If the first one break on the part of any individual or group of individuals happens to be a cheer, 30,000 of the 37,000 will follow suit. If it's a groan, the crowd will take it. It is guaranteed that the occasion calls for a groan, and groan it will be.

You just have to start something, whether it's a shout of "rober!" at the umpire or a rhythmic stamping of the feet, and the rest will fall in line.

Another Yankee pitching ace made to look like a dunce. It was not Hoyt's day. At the end of the fourth inning every man on the Giant team with the exception of Bancroft had poked out a hit, and even Ranny had reached first safely on a doubtful error by Ward off his hot shot to second.

In trying to reach third in the fourth inning Bambino Ruth descended upon the field with a bat and a ball. He was right in his path, however, and the collision could not be avoided. The Giants helped themselves to two hits per inning in every one of the first four and again in the seventh. The Yankees have grouped hits in only two of the twenty-eight innings they have played thus far.

It's what you did to-day, not the day before that counts. The fact that Aaron Ward had catapulted a terrific home run over the fence the day before carried no weight with Miller Huggins when he saw a chance for a pinch hitter to do some damage in the seventh. Ward having failed to hit safely up to that point was told to call it a day.

"That's the thanks Ward gets," shouted a disgruntled Yankee fan, who failed to follow the strategy of the moment. And when Elmer Smith pinch hitting for Ward, fanned—let's see, how does a pinch hitter fan—Oh, yes, ignominiously—the disgruntled one was ready to tear Huggins apart in his rage.

The autumn haze was in evidence again. The light looked as dull as early evening of the third day before it did in the tenth day yesterday.

Waiter Hoyt was the first Yankee twirler who did not wave red shirt sleeves at the Giant batsmen.

Even the comedy of the Altrock-Schacht team failed to hold the attention of the populace when Jack Dempsey popped down into the Giants' dugout just before the game and shook hands with every man in uniform. All eyes turned Dempsey's way, but a flock of camera fiends stormed the immediate vicinity and the heavyweight champion was soon lost to view.

Dreaming of that memorable day out in St. Louis when a pop bottle flew up and smote him senseless, Whitey Witt was caught foolishly asleep off first base in the third inning.

There was not a seat to be had. Bleachers or grandstand, after 12:30 P. M.

Schlang's throw to second before the first batter took his place in the box hit Umpire Klem in the small of the back. There were immediate expressions of sympathy in the stands, and the voices of the two girls who went to the concessions were drowned by the gleeful concerted shout of joy.

YANKS' LIBERALITY DARKENS CHANCES

Spotting Giants to Halfway Handicap Gives American Leaguers Big Job.

By WALTER TRUMBULL.

From a Yankee standpoint the world series begins to look a little shadier. If they are going to start after the Giants they had better get busy or the race will be merely a matter of record. The halfway mark is quite a handicap to give anybody in a sprint.

We cannot help reflecting upon how foolish those who gave odds on the Yankees must feel. They would have been just as silly before the series started to give odds on the Giants. A world series is an even bet. Yet, there will be a lot of them doing the same thing next season. Mr. Barnum calculated one a minute, but the birth rate has increased since his day.

Regardless of what the dope may or may not have shown, let us take a peek at the facts. Up to the present time the Yankees have been outlived, outpitched and outfielded. The Giant column may show more errors, but figures on paper and figures on the field are different things.

Colonel Huston declared to us after the game yesterday that he had a fighting ball yesterday and that the Yankees were the better team. He certainly made many hits off the Giant pitcher who had confidence in his own pitching.

De Witt Clinton, the annual leader of Manhattan and The Bronx schools, will be watched with interest in its contest with Dickinson, which it beat 6-0 last year. Stuyvesant travels to Milford, Conn.; Manual to Pawling, N. Y.; and St. John's Prep to Cornwall, N. Y. Evander Childs will meet New Rochelle High, and Morris engages White Plains. Brooklyn Prep and Fordham Prep have open dates. Both are expected to appear in their opening contests last Saturday.

All baseball material for the scrap heap, heavy as it is, is of drama in the triumph of Frank Stevens and the North Carolina team.

There were as there is one who has offered better bets a big incentive to make Grebe Reinstated.

Harry Greb was restored to good standing as a boxer in this State yesterday afternoon, the Boxing Commission reinstating the boxer until noon yesterday for his suspension.

Johnny Wilson or his manager, Martin Killian, to appear and accept Greb's challenge for a bout for the light heavyweight title, held by Greb. Neither put in an appearance, and the commission announced that Wilson's suspension will continue and that any boxers licensed by the commission who engage in a contest or exhibition with Wilson will lose their licenses.

Montclair Beats Central.

Montclair High School opened its football season yesterday at City Field, Newark, by trouncing Central High, last year's New Jersey Class B champions, by the score of 8 to 6. Myford intercepted a forward pass at midfield and ran through the whole Central team for Montclair's touchdown. A bad pass by the Central center, with his team on its own goal line, resulted in a safety by Woerner, and gave Montclair its margin of victory. Woerner scored Central's points on a line plunge.
